Americanists Hear Suffrage Argument from New Mexican History of 1625.

Is feet in thickness and fifty feet high, was the statement of former Gov. Bradford Prince, of New Mexico, in his paper on "Early Pueblo Missions in New Mexico." The ruins are of the first Spanish missions in the United States, so those who see in it a votes-for-women argument put it another way. I. e., the first Christian churches in this country were built by women alone. The third day of the Pan-American

The third day of the Pan-American Scientific Congress closed with a brilliant reception tendered by the secretary and regents of the Smithsonian Institution to the members of the Congress and invited guests. The new building of the National Museum was thrown open for the occasion and from 8:30 until 11 o'clock last evening the marble corridors were thronged with guests, representing not only the distinguished visitors to the Congress, but also the most fashionable members of Washington's diplomatic, official, and residential society.

The Marine Band played throughout the evening in the balcony overhanging the marble rotunds, and their scarlet coats were in pleasing contrast to the white and gold of the splendid background which made so excellent a foll.

When and the first Christian churches in this country were built by women alone.

"No man's hand had any part in the construction of these collossal walls," declared the speaker. Those at Gran Quivera, New Mexico, are the most unassive and impressive ruins in the United States. The walls are six feet in thickness and for nearly 250 years have stood, silent and deserted, monuments to the juilders. Though exposed to ceaseless disintergration, yet by their massiveness alone, they almost defer the speaker. As proof of his statement that none but women did the building, he quotes from Mr. Benavides, head of the Fanciscans white and gold of the splendid background which made so excellent a foil for the handsome gowns and lovely jewels worn by the ladies of the delegation and the prominent society hostesses of the Capital.

Myriad Lights Blink.

The building was brilliantly illuminated with myriad electric lights but depended upon its own beauty and splendor of culling for the figure and monasteries which they have built, all of the work having been done solely by the work having been done solely by women, and the boys and girls. For among these natives it is a custom for the women to make all the walls and if we oblige any man to build a wall the women laugh at him." Early History of Georgetown The delegates were guests of the fac-ulty of Georgetown, and, following the papers, enjoyed a reception, lunch and smoker. Rev. A. J. Donovan, president of the Georgetown University, president of the Georgetown University, presided at the session, and Father A. G. Morice, who for thirty years has been working among the Indians at St. Boniface, Mani-toba, Canada, acted as secretary. President Donlon, traced the history of the schools and colleges which later went to make up the present Georgetown University.
